A vibrant illustration of a pomegranate. On the left is a whole, ripe pomegranate with a deep red, bumpy skin and a small, dried, brownish calyx at the top. To its right is a pomegranate cut in half, revealing the interior. The inside is filled with numerous bright red, juicy seeds (arils) clustered together, separated by a pale, fibrous membrane. The seeds have a glossy, moist appearance. Below the whole pomegranate are several green leaves with prominent veins. At the bottom of the image, several individual pomegranate seeds are scattered, some whole and some broken into smaller pieces, along with a few tiny red droplets. The entire illustration is set against a plain white background.
